In 1891 there were 32 sions will arise for us to do so during debate when the Court took time to consider before delivery and which no doubt was car fully coundered. No authority has been shown on the other side in favour of the contention of Chan Ping and I am of opinion after the decisions in all these cases that it would be unduly limiting the meaning and intention of the Act if under all the circumstances of this case I held that the signature placed on this document by Chan Ping himself did not satisfy the Statute of Francis. It is his personal act, and it was intended to authenticate and acknowledge the contract he entered into. Another point has been taken, namely, that no action should have been brought against the defendant on the contract; that he should have been sued in damages for misrepresenting his authority. But in the case cited in support of this contention, Collen v. Wright, 7 E. & B. and in other cases, the person who professed to act as agent was a distinct and separate person from the principal, and it was never intended by either of the parties that the agent should be personally bound, therefore the only semed against him could not be the contract to which t was not intended he should personally be a party but was an action for misrepresentation. Whereas in this case Chan Ping professed to not for a firm of which he was one of the members, he therefore acted as principal as far as he was concerned and also as agent for the others; the fact that he did not and could not bind the others does not relieve him from the consequences of the contract he entered into. The appeal will therefore be allowed and indement entered for the plaintiff against Chan Ping for the amount laimed and all costs—interest reserved. The Chief Justice said-I have had the advantage of seeing the judgment of my learned colleague and I concur in his conclusions. I may say that the principal doubt in my mind was not so much as to the sufficiency of thesignature to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, as upon the point whather the defendant could be held ndividually liable in this instance. The distinction appears to me to be this. If the defendant had been the mere agent or employé of the firm, signed the firm's name with the firm's authority. he could not be liable on the justrument because he did nothing to bind himself. In the present case defendant was a partner and therefore ha could not sign for the other partners if he had not their authority to bind them. The case of Bretel w. Williams is, I think, a distinct and binding authority that under those circumstances the individual liability of the partner signing remains. Therefore concur that the present action is actionable and the appeal must be alowed. Judgment for the plaintiff for the
